Biography Summary

Dr. Janice Marie Collins is a multi-national and international award-winning academician, teacher, scholar, creative, person of service, journalist and documentarian with more than 20 years of experience in the journalism industry and an international and national award-winning professor, scholar, researcher and teacher with 18 years of teaching experience on the university level.

During her journalism career, she earned multiple Emmy, Best of Gannett, Associated Press, NABJ, and AABJ awards for writing, producing, reporting, cinematography, and editing and numerous other Emmy awards, as part of a team. She has worked in the national network and top-ten market including ESPN programming and Network NBC News Channel with former NBC News president, Steve Capus. From her beginnings as an anchor, she has worked in almost every position in a newsroom but considers her forte as producing special programs, investigative journalism and finding and telling the stories that many miss. Throughout her career, she has covered many national and international events such as the Olympics, Super Bowl, the Susan Smith drownings, Oklahoma City Bombings, Michael Jackson abuse allegations, the Atlanta Bombings, the Gullah Geechee connection and stories on relocating Self throughout the Diaspora.

She is extremely effective in management, leadership and collaboration. From leading and chairing nonprofits to professionally managing onsite and freelance employees and budgets, Collins loves the challenge of reaching goals and thinking inside and outside of the box. In academia, she was selected as one of the Top 50 Journalism Professors in the nation of 2012 by Journalismdegree.org and has received first place awards in national/international competitions for her teaching, service, creative endeavor, and research. She was awarded the Baskett Mosse National Award for Faculty Development AEJMC 2017, "Best in Digital" for her website of inclusion and diversity called Hearmyvoiceonline.com and, consistently, made the Teachers of Excellence List (top 1%) at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign since 2013. She was also awarded a Faculty of Excellence award by the Department of Minority Affairs at Eastern Illinois University and an Excellence Award for Teaching and Service at Hampton University. College newsrooms she has assisted in as faculty advisor or facilitator, have been award winning including a NABJ, Virginia Chapter award for original news-magazine show at Hampton called "Sound Off," and numerous College Regional Emmy, INBA, SINBA and SPJ awards at Eastern Illinois University.

Collins researched and developed an innovative critical pedagogy, praxis and theory of inclusion called Active Centralized Empowerment (A.C.E.) over the last 16 years and finds that it allows the voices, talents and skills of each student and professor to be optimized in collaborative settings. She calls it, "Teaching Without Borders," which is also the title of her recent book publication. It is a space where no one is left behind or in the margins and each student has an equal opportunity to excel no matter who they are, their skill level, or where they are from. You can read what other students are saying about the Active Centralized Empowerment experience by reading their reflections on the Teaching Without Borders website and see the results of de-marginalization in the classroom. This website works in partnership with her latest academic book publication, Teaching without Borders: Creating Equity and Inclusion through Active Centralized Empowerment. This faculty resource book introduces readers to Active Centralized Empowerment (ACE), to help prepare students to lead in a diverse, multicultural world and effective Transformational leadership, communication and collaboration skills are developed and enhanced.

Whether she's teaching video storytelling for broadcast, multimedia, or digital distribution, students learn from intense hands-on activities, management skills engagement on how to exercise their authentic voice with respect for diverse opinions and voices. "It is my belief that each student is special and has something unique and special to offer the world. My job is to assist them on their journey to find just what that "something" is while achieving academically. My approach is to teach the human who happens to be a student and I always look forward to meeting my students each semester and each organization and client."

Her creative endeavors and research have also been nationally and internationally recognized. Her book publication, 250 Years and Still a Slave: Breaking Free with Active Centralized Empowerment, offers a non-blaming Critical Cultural perspective on race relations from a social-psychological platform that prominent educator, Jane Elliott, calls "a Great read!, and this should be required reading for every teacher in the classroom." This publication has led to a large amount of invitations to present. She produced an international award-winning television broadcast program and web-series called A Taste of Gullah that aired, regionally (over 8 million viewers), on PBS station WEIU, and won Best Documentary at the International Garifuna Film Festival in Venice, California. She published an article on leadership development titled, "Leadership Development in College Newsroom Labs: It's Transactional," in the top journal, Journalism & Mass Communication Educator, and a book chapter on image portrayals in prime-time commercials titled, "Representations of Race/Ethnicity, Gender, Class, and Power in 1,084 Prime-time TV Commercials from 2005," in the book release of the edited collection Feminist Interpretations of Advertising: What's the Big Idea?, second edition, with Lexington Press.

While publishing and achieving across platforms while effectively addressing the demands of teaching, service, and research, she also produced a comprehensive (5 hours), unique, autoethnography series called, "Journey to My Mother's Land: Extending the Gate's Effect into Africa," that chronicles her immersion-trip back to her maternal ancestral land of Sierra Leone, West Africa and the Mende tribe. This very unique documentary was picked up by the Nigerian Television Authority, the largest broadcast network in Africa with an audience penetration into the U.S. , U.K., Canada and all of Africa. Highly skilled and working with a limited budget, she was the researcher, producer, writer, editor, narrator and cinematographer for this piece that took her 4 years and 32 days to complete. Collins also hosts a radio/podcast program called "Theoretical Tea and Company," and freelances as a Motivational Speaker, Life Coach, national and international Media Consultant and other various Media roles.

For 2 consecutive years, Collins won first place in the Top Faculty Paper Competition at the national Broadcast Educators Association Conference as, both, coauthor, and sole author. Her research and specialization focus mainly on processes of De-Marginalization of individuals, media content, learning and working environments, inclusion with power, diversity, multiculturalism and leadership development and works across disciplines and nations to center voices from the margins. Self-empowerment, self-agency, and addressing issues of Power along the lines of various identity constructs is key to her studies. As an inclusive humanitarian Collins has led workshops and initiatives in Sierra Leone, West Africa, Guyana, West Indies, Abuja, Nigeria and Shenzhen, China. She views the world as one multicultural, enormous family of inclusion. As President of World Changers Media International Foundation (WCMIF), she works with amazing team members who are truly committed to helping others-truly believing in the Global community. They are change agents involved in all things media with the purpose of making the world better one story at a time. Collins is a Kopenhaver Fellow and was selected one of sixteen participants at the Poynter Diverse Voices workshop in 2017.

Collins is an effective Visionary Leader who is progressive in her thinking and agendas. Although she is excited to have been nationally and internationally recognized in all 4 areas of assessment (teaching, service, research, creative endeavor), she remains focused on working to make the world, in general, a kinder, safer, and more equitable place to thrive and achieve positive dreams and goals- whatever they may be. Her background as a “military brat” heightened and developed her belief in diversity, leadership and adaptability, as she moved almost every year and a half until the age of 14 and lived among diverse people and voices. Despite living in various states, she considers herself an East Coast native of Virginia where she spends as much time as she can fishing, camping, kayaking, eating plenty of seafood and working on one of her ongoing novels and conversational poetry. She loves to play chess, camp, ride horses, cook great meals from scratch, listen to great music, play the guitar and read non-fiction books. Her Motto: Aspire to Inspire!

Courses taught: Advanced/Intermediate Broadcast Journalism, Multimedia Reporting, Exploring Fine Arts & Creativity, Specialized Independent Studies and Specialized course covering website and organization HearMyVoiceonline.com (teaches Inclusive Learning, Management and Leadership skills).

Responsibilities: Teach intermediate and advanced techniques of newsgathering, writing, producing, editing, reporting, photography, cinematography and management for broadcast and online news content, publication and distribution. Students produce and engage in production, management and leadership roles to produce Newsbreaks, News Updates, Newscasts, and in-depth stories of diversity and inclusion. They engage in critical thinking, self-reflexive exercises and issues of de-marginalization, inclusion and diversity. Multimedia, Broadcast, and Independent cross-disciplines students post and broadcast their stories and newscasts on UI7 online and television news network, and platforms I created. View results from some of my classes at and partnering website to book publication or order your copy of my book publication on inclusion. Hear My Voice (HMY) hearmyvoiceonline.com is an award-winning interdisciplinary course, student organization and website that allows students across campus, campuses, and nations to engage in collaborative learning, practice, manage, lead and distribute inclusionary news projects and articles, topics and voices from the margins. HMY won the Baskett Mosse Faculty Development Award for contributions in teaching, service, creative endeavor and research and AEJMC awards for second place in "Best in Digital."

The web stories produced by my students in my multimedia classes have also provided CU Citizens Access publication with material for their online publications. Some of the articles can be viewed here: <http://cu-citizenaccess.org/2014/07/24/training-trusting-generation-scams-elderly-and-how-prevent-them/>, <http://cu-citizenaccess.org/2014/06/23/obtaining-organic-fresh-food-budget/>, <http://cu-citizenaccess.org/2014/06/09/unconditional-love-pet-ownership-brings-joy-and-more-any-age/>, and here <http://cu-citizenaccess.org/2014/05/15/preparing-unpredictable-urbana-assisted-living-home-regularly-practices-fire-safety/>.

Selective Independent Study classes engage in advance research, storytelling and documentary production such as, “A Taste of Gullah,” that was published on air during prime time on PBS station WEIU. A link to the multimedia individual pieces that were produced for online distribution can be found here – <https://youtu.be/dLIbDF7qZ4U?list=PLvomV4564Jyhe-cVh9OHLYKqqn8hUhs6F> and the full broadcast version can be found here - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EHV43AlwJQo&feature=youtu.be>. “A Taste of Gullah” broadcast television program won the Garifuna International Indigenous Film Festival award for “Best Documentary.”

Instructional Objective: The main objective that underlines the infrastructure of all of my classes, service, research, and creative endeavors is to provide opportunities for the optimal experience of development for each student. To accomplish this goal, I incorporate the critical pedagogical module and praxis called, Active Centralized Empowerment. Some of the benefits this pedagogical style allows for includes Critical Thinking, Inclusivity of Diversity, Active News Decision and Judgments, increased Self-Esteem, Transformational Leadership skills, Empathy and Self-Agency within a collective while learning a discipline. My general objective is to further develop and challenge students’ Transformational and Transactional Leadership skills that will lead to creating more effective managers and responsible journalists with respect to diversity of content, audience, and newsroom demographics and issues of marginalization within a collaborative environment.
